 By the end of these two days you will be able to: ■ Define and describe the importance and pre-requisites of Test Case writing ■ Describe the characteristics of a good Test Case and how to write it ■ List the attributes of Test Case and the documents required to write a Test Case ■ Provide an overview and describe the importance of Test data preparation ■ Provide some pointers on Test Data preparation and describe the process ■ Identify the challenges of the process ■ Describe the categories of Test Data and how you can design your own Test Data considering them	subject areas that will be covered and the activities that will be performed (exercises, case studies). Address the expectations that the participants listed in their introductions. Include information about breaks, lunch etc. while describing the agenda. ■ Inform the participants about the evaluation criteria and end of course assessments. ■ Inform the participants that you expect highly interactive sessions and that you welcome any questions that they might have. ■ Ask that all participants turn off their phones or put them in silent mode.
